Kibanov "Innovative Personnel Management,", which took place in Moscow, Russian Federation, 15th April-5th May 2020. Organized by Moscow State University of Management, the Forum chiefly focused on HR management issues under conditions of active penetration of IT into the management and economic sphere. The authors of contributions included in this book examine both the theoretical basis for the development of the labor landscape in our digital future, and specific practical issues related to the real business practice. The book includes results of multidisciplinary studies on the following issues: employment and the labor market: a future perspective; current trends of HR management development in digital conditions; IT for creating healthy work conditions; digital transformation and new architecture of the labor market; innovative, strategic HR management and HR analytics; leadership, etc. The book consists of six parts corresponding to thematic areas of the Forum. The first part deals with the transformation of the labor market under the influence of digitalization and international economic relations. The second part is devoted to the analysis of the current changes in the HR management caused by digitalization, as well as issues of creating a healthy work environment and managing well-being with information technology. New architecture of the labor market is considered in the third part of the book in the face of the global uncertainty and the application of digital technology in entrepreneurial activities. The fourth part investigates innovative approaches to the personnel development: from resource management to capacity management. The fifth part presents strategic HR management and HR analytics in the context of current macro-calls. And finally, the sixth part is aimed at considering leadership aspects and relations between investments in the human capital and needed business results. This book is a combination of different scientific opinions and research works of scholars from different countries and regions, offering us a colorful picture of the future labor landscape: jobs, competences and skills that will be in demand.

A Study of Mammalia and Geology Across the Cretaceous-tertiary Boundary in Garfield County, Montana J. David Archibald 1982-01-01 Important changes have occurred in the composition of forest, woodland, and riparian vegetation in the Creede area since the Oligocene. The evidence for this is based on fossil samples from several sites in each of 4 areas in the northern part of the Creede basin. All of them are rich in plant remains deposited in a lake near the shore or on floodplains interfingering with lake sediments. The florules at the 2 lacustrine sites (Birdsey Gulch and Dry Gulch) differ considerably in composition owing to topographic setting and exposure, whereas those of the two floodplain environments (5-Mile Bridge and Wason Cliffs) are more similar. The general sample of the vegetation of the area is adequate and most probably represents typical vegetation of the region. The major changes these samples reflect are in the relative abundance of taxa, many of which are represented by similar species in the region today. Some foret trees (Abies, Picea, Pinus, Pseudotsuga) have become more dominant in the vegetation, whereas earlier they were rather rare. Woodland shows a similar relationship, as does the riparian community, in which new taxa have entered the region (Alnus, Populus cf. angustifola), or have become dominant (Betula, Populus cf. tremuloides). Grasslands are relatively new yet are being displaced by shrubs and woody perennials as the result of recent overgrazing by cattle and sheep. Some taxa that contributed to these vegetation zones disappeared as climate became less equable (Arbutus, Cercis, Cerocarpus, Pinus, Populus, Quercus) or as the incidence of summer rainfall decreased (Crataegus, Mahonia, Picea, Prunus, Tsuga, etc.) While the dynamic nature of change in terms of species abundance within communities is apparent, most Creede species show that there has been relatively little morphologic change during the past 26 m.y.
